

Trish Adobea Tchume

Trish Adobea Tchume is a first generation Ghanaian-American, a social and racial justice advocate, facilitator and trainer. She is proud to be the Senior Director for Leadership Research and Practice. In this role, Trish collaborates with other organizations to explore, define, and support leadership and organizational approaches that prefigure a world where all of us can thrive. She brings a breadth of experience from her most recent role as the director of leadership development at the Center for Community Change and from former roles as executive director of the Young Nonprofit Professionals Network, the network organizer for Within Our Lifetime: A Network to End Racism, and the director of civic engagement for the Building Movement Project. Trish is a Brooklynite, a proud auntie, a beach stan, and devotes her volunteer time to cool projects like the Central Brooklyn Food Coop and the boards of Change Elemental and the New York Foundation.

Trish holds a Masters in Education and has been published in the Huffington Post, the Stanford Social Innovation Review, the Nonprofit Quarterly, and many other publications.
